Man caught with 1,000 stolen EGGS in his fridge after pinching them from work

Who stole these EGGS? A 47 year old man - whose surname is Gu - who worked as a security guard for a food factory in Pinghu City, China.

Why? Gu told police that he "really liked eggs".

How did he do it? Gu worked on the night shift, and would take what he wanted.

How was Gu caught? Gu was seen riding his electric bicycle back from work - in May 2015 - with two 'suspicious'-looking suitcases.

What else had Gu taken? Police found stolen pins, plasters, brushes, brooms, meat, salt, soap, boxes of tissues and bottles of detergent in his house, as well as more than 1,000 eggs in Gu's fridge (all of which had been labelled with a use-by date).

Does Gu have anything to say? Newspapers reported Gu saying: "I lost count how many times I have stolen. Probably hundreds of times. I have stolen everything in my house."

There is a lot in this story to turn into comedy. Start off thinking about these things:

- Gu said that he "really liked eggs". Do you think this is true?
- Do you think Gu had a system for where he put the eggs, e.g. freshest in the bowl?
- Can you act out how a person can steal hundreds of eggs?
- What do you think Gu was planning on doing with all the eggs?
- Gu stole from a food factory. What could he have taken from a different workplace?
- Gu said "I have stolen everything in my house". Do you believe him? What is there in a house, and how do you imagine Gu could have stolen it?
- Can you act out him having a friend over to his house, and seeing all this stuff?
